Welcome to Easthole

The Unit 4 (Easthole) tract stretches along the bayshore of St. George Sound and is located just east of the center of St. George Island, Florida. This site, named after the oyster harvest area located just to the north in the bay, is made up of 251 individual lots and a single seven acre parcel of marsh; all fragmented by platted county roads, alleys and canals.

From 1982 to 2010, the state acquired the parcels that make up Unit 4 to conserve the shoreline and contribute to the overall protection of Apalachicola Bay. The properties were incorporated into the Apalachicola National Estuarine Research Reserve and are currently managed by the Office of Resilience and Coastal Protection.

The property offers a variety of recreational opportunities including fishing, hiking, picnicking, wildlife viewing and beach activities. Tidal marsh, flatwoods and scrub are the dominant natural communities. Unit 4 is also part of the Great Florida Birding Trail.

Exploring the Area

Depending on the time of year and weather, island life can be a challenging environment. We encourage visitors to practice these safety tips:

- Stay hydrated and apply sunscreen.
- Use caution as trails and low areas may be flooded during certain times of the year.

Access at 6th Street East

The main entrance at 6th Street provides visitor access to St. George Sound. It contains a small parking area, picnic table, bike rack, and information kiosk. Visitors may also carry kayaks or canoes to the water, although there is no designated launch at this location.

About two miles of trail extend throughout the property on the platted roads and shorelines. Foot-traffic only paths are not blazed but are easy to follow. The coastal wetlands are especially scenic and good for wildlife viewing.

One primitive campsite is located between the 9th Street East entrance and the bayshore. Paddlers traveling along Florida’s Circumnavigational Saltwater Paddling Trail have priority at the site. The campsite is free but registration with the Reserve is recommended. There are no restroom facilities or potable water at Unit 4.
